Nucleus appoints Jeannie Bowman as head of internal systems

Nucleus, the adviser-built wrap, has hired Jeannie Bowman as its inaugural head of internal systems.

In this new role Bowman will be responsible for designing, developing and cultivating the systems at Nucleus, and leading the infrastructure and systems security teams. As well as having accountability for defining and overseeing the development of the IT systems architecture, she will also manage the change associated with all system improvements.

Bowman joins Nucleus from Shell, where she undertook several global IT management projects and operations, in addition to audit management roles. She has 17 years' experience in the energy industry in a variety of IT related roles and has previously worked internationally as a regional senior IT technical consultant in Kuala Lumpur.

Bowman will report into chief technology officer Andrew Smith.

Bowman said: "Nucleus is an innovative fintech company with a great reputation. It was a natural move, therefore, to join a company that places such an emphasis on technology and development.

"I am very excited to begin my journey at the company, and look forward to contributing to its future success."

Nucleus chief technology officer Andrew Smith added: "We're delighted to welcome Jeannie to the Nucleus team. She brings a wealth of insight into developing operational systems and ensuring they are robust, and her experience and knowledge of global businesses will play a huge role in helping us to continue to deliver an effective and secure service to our users.

"As the business continues to grow, experienced technology hires like this will only strengthen our proposition further and ensure the platform is future-proofed for years to come."
